2000 Grant Guidelines

Our Mission

Wilburforce Foundation is dedicated to protecting Nature's richness and diversity through funding programs that help preserve our remaining wild places.

To accomplish this mission, we focus our funding on organizations that work to protect habitats which are critically important to sustaining abundant ecological communities in Western Canada and the Western United States. Many North American ecosystems are more endangered than tropical rainforests, and even areas that were once too isolated to profitably exploit, such as the mid-coast forests of British Columbia, are now being destroyed at an alarming rate. From the tundra of Alaska to the desert Southwest, land and nature are being rapidly consumed to answer the demands of our unsustainable population growth. It is critical that we promptly identify and work to preserve areas that have a strategic biological value and that we continue to speak out against and confront new threats to areas that are already protected.

In keeping with these concerns, our goals are:

- Protect the last remaining pristine places, with priority on areas that have the greatest biological significance.
- Preserve the richness and diversity of native species by protecting important local habitats, including critical wildlife connectors and flyways
- Leave a legacy of healthy organizations that can effectively and efficiently respond to challenges and opportunities.
- Assure strong and lasting public support for wilderness preservation.

Beginning in 1999, the following geographic areas will receive priority for our funding: the Yellowstone to Yukon region, American-Canadian Arctic, British Columbia Mid-Coast, and wilderness and roadless areas in Washington, Oregon and the American Southwest. In addition, we will consider proposals that seek to protect other wilderness areas in Alaska and British Columbia.

Our funding for land trust programs in the U. S. is now administered by the Land Trust Alliance. For additional information, please contact LTA directly at 970-245-5811.
